Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Study of the Wisconsin Wood-Using Industries The importance of Wisconsin as a lumber producing and a lumber consuming state has been long apparent, as evidenced by the industrial data gathered for the entire country, though less information concerning the consumption of forest products in the state has been gathered than in the matter of the production. For several years the commonwealth, through the agency of the State Board of Forestry has been urging protection of its forest lands as well as reforestation for the purpose of prolonging the life of, the lumber business and increasing the number of industries wherein wood in its various forms enters exclusively or partially into the manufactures. Data showing the number, character, and variety of the products of the wood-using concerns located within the state, and the expenditures for raw material for these products, were not available, and it was with the view of compiling and publishing these data that the State Board of Forestry entered into cooperation with the Office of Wood Utilization of the United States Forest...
