Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Bead Stringing The time has passed when arguments have to be used to prove the educational value of handwork in the schoolroom. Much, however, remains to be done in the way of selection and of the organization of that handwork so as to make it as efficient and as economical as possible, both in time and materials. The following series of lessons were suggested by the well-known logical organization of the kindergarten handwork. They, however, have been adapted to the more advanced grades of public schools, and most of them have been satisfactorily tested in our public school-rooms with forty or fifty children under one teacher. The first fact to be met in any logical organization of handwork is that point, line, and surface are the three elements by means of which all the transformations and creations of the hand of man are accomplished. The casting of iron ore, the molding of clay, and a few other of the plastic arts may, perhaps, be excepted. Even these, however, are more or less dependent upon the...
